Welcome to the Chinese Year of the Pig. This is certainly shaping up to be an exciting and challenging year with lots of new events and activities.

Look out for volunteering days at Highfields Heritage Village feeding the animals and learning about early Australian settlers and at WhatsUp in Disability. Where we will be meeting and interviewing local identities and attending events such as shows and movies and writing reviews about the experience.

At a recent meeting I was shown a picture of 2 dogs waiting for their dinner that perfectly reflects our new logo

News Hound Cover Story

Brendan Hall

I must admit that Brendan Hall is one of my favourite inspirational people that I know. Brendan is the cousin of my Godchildren and I have known him since he was born.

As a six-year-old recovering in hospital after losing his leg due to complications from chicken pox, Brendan had 3 things on his mind.

He wondered whether he was still sitting next to his best mate in his grade two class, when he would be able to start swimming again, and whether anyone would bring him a McFlurry.

It's this passion – for swimming, not ice cream – and adaptability that has made Brendan one of the most decorated swimmers in the Australian team.

Brendan is a young man with a great sense of humour (just look at the cover page picture) as well as a determination to represent Australia and wear the green and gold.

He didn't have to wait long. Brendan was just 14 when he was selected to represent Australia at the Beijing 2008 Paralympics, the youngest member of the swimming team.

Having tasted success so many times over the previous 10 years, Brendan was hungry to make history on the Gold Coast in 2018.

“People may look at me and say I have a disability, but when I'm in the water, I feel like I'm no different to anyone beside me if it's an able bodied counterpart.”

Bronze medalist Brenden Hall poses during the medal ceremony for the Men's S9 100m Freestyle Final on day two of the Gold Coast 2018 Commonwealth Games at Optus Aquatic Centre on April 6, 2018.

Brenden Hall celebrates victory in the Men's S9 100m Backstroke Final on day six of the Gold Coast 2018 Commonwealth Games.

New NDIS Price Guide 1st February

What's Changed?

A new NDIS Price Guide is in effect 1st February 2019 and the changes that have been made are not exactly what were expected

Very High Intensity Pricing Tier

This was recommended by the Independent Pricing Review and announced in December of last year. While this change was expected, its execution is surprising.

It was recommended then that it be linked to the complexity of a Participant's support needs so that, for example, somebody with "severe behaviours of concern" would receive funding at the highest level. However, the actual implementation of the pricing tier is linked not to the Participant's support needs but the wage of the worker. The levels are listed below with the VIC/NSW/QLD/TAS price for Assistance With Self-Care Activities - Weekday Daytime for comparison:

Level 1 ("standard") – where a shift is undertaken by a worker who is classified at SCHADS Award 2.3 or below: $48.14 / hr

Level 2 ("high intensity") – where a shift is undertaken by a worker who is classified at SCHADS Award 2.4 or 3.1: $50.73 / hr

Level 3 ("very high intensity") – where a shift is undertaken by a worker who is classified at SCHADS Award 3.2 or above: $52.98 / hr

The obvious benefit of this third tier is that it creates another step on the vocational pathway for Support Workers and recognises the skill they bring to their work. It also encourages providers to support Participants who they might otherwise not have.

Most troubling of all, the NDIA have made the confusing statement that "it is anticipated that in most cases the total cost of the mix of supports that participants can purchase will not increase as a result of the changes." For those of you playing along at home – yes, this means that the NDIA estimate that people with complex support needs will not spend more on support, despite the cost per hour increasing. This can only mean that they imagine people will purchase fewer hours of support.

The statement continues, "The number of plan reviews is therefore expected to be limited” and advises that any review request will be subject to their standard prioritisation process (i.e. good luck getting one before your scheduled plan review!).

This comment begs the question, who decides which Participants should be supported by higher skilled workers? If it is the Participant, will the Planner then need to agree to put the required funding in the Plan or does the NDIA somehow expect that Participants who want more trained workers will find a way to pay for this within the same budget?

Providers and Participants both have some fairly significant work ahead of them now to understand how this change impacts existing plans. This includes rewriting service agreements, recalculating budgets, aligning rostering and invoicing systems so the correct rate is charged and having reliable mechanisms in place to make sure that unexpected shift changes don't have an adverse effect on a Participant's budget.

This means that for all supports delivered from 1st February, providers can charge the higher price. It is unclear if Participant Plans will be scaled up to account for this loading in the meantime so while this is good news for providers, it remains unclear who is really paying the price in the meantime.

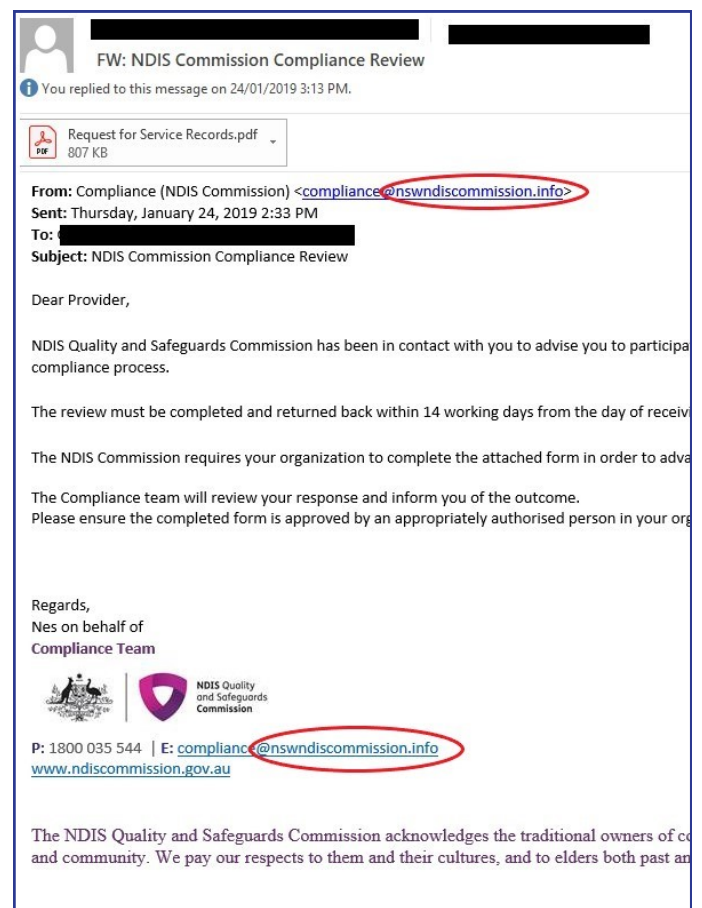

Capacity Building Training

Minor changes to capacity building and training in plan and financial management, making the definitions and price consistent regardless of whether it is delivered by a Plan Manager or Support Coordinator.

Commission email scam

Scammers sent fake NDIS Commission emails with the subject line 'NDIS Commission Compliance Review'. The email asks you to participate in a compliance review and attaches a 'Request for Service Records' form. It instructs the recipient to complete and return the information within 14 days of receipt. The email comes from a .info address but official NDIS Commission emails will always come from a ndiscommission.gov.au domain.

Do not open the attachment and do not disclose the information requested. If you have inadvertently released this information, please contact the Commission immediately.

Productivity Commission Report 2019

End the blame game, stop letting people with disability fall through the gaps and pull your finger out to ensure action on areas other than the NDIS.

That's the short version of the Productivity Commission's report released this month.

The report confirms what people with disability and their families all around the country have known for years – that not enough is being done to improve the quality of life of all Australians with disability.

According to the report, finger pointing between levels of government, lack of clarity around roles and responsibilities and an all-consuming focus on the roll out National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS) has left many people with disability and their families to fall through the gaps, and has failed to lift the quality of life of all Australians with disability.

No surprises here.

In releasing the report Professor Robert Fitzgerald could not have said it better:

“With so much focus on the NDIS, limited attention has been placed on achieving better outcomes for the many people with disability who are not supported through the NDIS. There's about 3.8 million people with disability in Australia who are not supported by the NDIS. Most people with disabilities are not and never will be covered by the NDIS yet their rights, needs and aspirations matter.”

They sure do, Professor Fitzgerald, they sure do.

So what does this report mean?

Last year the Productivity Commission conducted a review into the National Disability Agreement (NDA). The NDA is one of a series of agreements between the Commonwealth and State and Territory governments which cover major areas like health, education and housing.

The goal of the NDA is to “enhance the quality of life for people with disability, their families and carers”. In theory it is supposed to ensure co-operation between governments, clarify roles and responsibilities and hold governments accountable for what they are (and are not) doing.

But in their report the PC found that in reality the NDA was outdated, had a weak influence on policy and as a result had done little to improve life outcomes for people with disability.

Nothing new here.

In particular the PC found that in focusing on the roll out of the NDIS, governments had let many, many other important things fall by the wayside.

“There has been very little progress in meeting previously agreed goals such as raising labour force participation rates for people with disability or improving the wellbeing of carers. We have identified key gaps in the areas of advocacy services, support for carers, and supports for people with disabilities arising from mental health conditions, as well as access to community and inclusion programs,” Commissioner Fitzgerald said.

Community Partnerships

Commission's Findings

The Productivity Commission's findings are exactly the same as what they told us at Make it Work forums all around the country last year – that in rolling out the NDIS governments appeared to have downed their tools on all other areas that affect the lives of people with disability – really important things like education, health and transport.

These areas are critical to the lives of all four million Australians with disability – way beyond the 460,000 people who will eventually be supported by the NDIS.

But downing tools was only the half of it. You also told us that programs and services that helped people who were not eligible for the NDIS were also being wound down, leaving people and their families without critical support.

The Commission's report concludes that a new, reinvigorated NDA could be a strong positive force to guide future disability policy, to promote better access to mainstream and disability services and to improve outcomes for people with disability.

Medication Training

BigDog has a commitment to the maintenance of safe and effective practices in assisting participants in the management of their individual medication regimes to the level of support they require.

BigDog will only assist with medication where a participant is not able to take medication themselves unsupervised and a pharmacist has dispensed medication into a Webster-Pak.

One of the recommendations to reduce medication errors and harm is to use the “seven rights” when assisting a participant to take their medication. Even though the role of the support worker is to assist the participant only, there is still a duty of care to ensure that the seven rights are followed:

1. The Right Medication
2. The Right Patient
3. The Right Dosage
4. The Right Route
5. The Right Time
6. The Right Reason
7. The Right Documentation

Training dates will be shown on Sling

A Melbourne health service has been fined $25,000 without conviction after a nurse was assaulted by a patient with aggressive and violent behavioural issues.

In December 2018 the service pleaded guilty to 1 contravention of section 21 of the Occupational Health and Safety Act 2004 (OHS Act) for failing to provide the information, instruction and training necessary to allow workers to perform their work safely and without risks to health.

The contravention related to an incident in 2015. A nurse was attending to a patient when she was physically assaulted (hair pulled, pushed, punched, head butted and kneed in

Employers must, so far as is reasonably practicable, provide and maintain a working environment that is safe and without risks to health. This duty requires employers to control risks to health and safety; employers should eliminate risks where possible. This duty includes providing employees with enough information, instruction, training or supervision to do their work safely and to maintain safe systems of work.

Employers also have a duty to ensure that workplace activities don't endanger other people, such as visitors, clients or the public.
